Eldy reviewed at MakeUseOf

 A nice article on Eldy has appeared on MakeUseof.com

There are more than 6 million people over the age of 60 who arenâ€™t familiar with the Internet, which is understandable since most operating systems available out there just arenâ€™t exactly geared towards the elderly. There are things that will take some time to get used to, things like file browsers that hint at lots of folders that youâ€™ll never touch and sometimes even cryptic error messages that donâ€™t help much in resolving a problem.

TheÂ Eldy Association is an Italian non-profit organization looking to make it easier for new computer users to learn about email, browsing the web and more. According to its website, the Associationâ€™s goal is to â€œreach out to the elderly and disabled community with a simple computer program that can encourage their staying active and social, thus reducing their isolation and lonelinessâ€•.

What IsÂ

Eldy?]
The resulting computer program that the Eldy Association came up with is Eldy, a bundle of essential programs in an easy-to-understand interface for the elderly, with big text and simple, recognizable icons, that has been translated to 22 languages. Think of it as a blown-up mini-operating system that contains an email client, chat system, web browser and even access to a simplified version of Notepad, Eldy TV, and Skype.

Read all at: Â Â http://www.makeuseof.com/tag/teach-senior-email-browse-web-eldy/